Green.Building.Solutions. 2014 opened

06.08.2014 Vienna. The international summer school Green.Building.Solutions is conceived as a modular three-week course at four universities in Vienna and addresses central environmental, economic, technical and social aspects of sustainable planning and building. The summer school offers more than 30 participants from 17 nations the opportunity to examine and practically experience specialist content from an interdisciplinary perspective.

The summer school aims at imparting knowledge. Prospective architects acquire skills for the key issue of resource-oriented building and planning. The students gain expert knowledge of sustainable development in the context of architecture and construction, thus enhancing their qualification profile and improving their access to various vocational fields. The acquisition of knowledge concerning passive house technologies forms an essential aspect here.

Thanks to the Sto-Stiftung, four German painter and varnishers are participating in the three-week course as well. What's special about this year's course is the fact that during the third week workshops of four architectural students and four painter and varnishers each will jointly equip a model with a composite heat insulation system as the basis for a passive house. The Sto-Stiftung supports four students from three different countries as well as the four German painter and varnishers participating in this event.
